

In running a service related business I find myself and my employees spend a great deal of time in our vehicles. During this time I listen to local radio broadcasts as well as subscription broadcast services from XM Radio. I do enjoy access to a variety of programming unavailable at the local level. However, I need access to both weather and traffic alerts at any instant. I am willing to pay for this service in addition to my local choices. Local programming cannot provide me or my employees with the information we need when we need it. I do not expect local radio to provide these services. But I do expect to be able to have access to this programming through XM Radio. As this is still America I urge you to allow the consumer to determine which services are useful and cost effective and which are not..
